

Name three things in this room that make you feel a little more here.

Notice your body and surroundings.

Let your eyes land on one ordinary object. What do you notice about it?

Notice your body and surroundings.

Where is your body being supported right now?

Notice your body and surroundings.

What sound is closest? What sound is farthest away?

Notice your body and surroundings.

If you could give this moment a weather report, what would it be?

Notice your body and surroundings.

Notice your hands. What are they doing, holding, or asking for?

Notice your body and surroundings.

Name one thing that is true in this exact minute.

Notice your body and surroundings.

What changes when you lengthen only the exhale, naturally and without force?

Notice your body and surroundings.

What is one place you could make two inches more comfortable?

Notice your body and surroundings.

What is one sentence you would rather hear than the one your inner critic is offering?

Practice a more humane sentence with yourself.

What would “kind enough” sound like here?

Practice a more humane sentence with yourself.

What would you say to someone you love in this exact moment?

Practice a more humane sentence with yourself.

What are you allowed to be learning?

Practice a more humane sentence with yourself.

Which expectation could become a request instead?

Practice a more humane sentence with yourself.

What deserves less judgment
today?

Practice a more humane sentence with yourself.

What can be true without being fixed tonight?

Practice a more humane sentence with yourself.

What is one thing you did that was quietly difficult?

Practice a more humane sentence with yourself.

What would it mean to take your own side for five minutes?

Practice a more humane sentence with yourself.

What kind of comfort sounds possible, not perfect?

Become curious about comfort and care.

What sensory cue might help: warmth, water, air, texture, quiet, or movement?

Become curious about comfort and care.

What would make the next hour five percent gentler?

Become curious about comfort and care.

What have you been needing but postponing?

Become curious about comfort and care.

What is one ordinary thing that helps you feel more like yourself?

Become curious about comfort and care.

If care were practical today,
what would it look like?

Become curious about comfort and care.

What would a good-enough pause include?

Become curious about comfort and care.

What do you want less of around you right now?

Become curious about comfort and care.

What is one small pleasure you do not have to earn?

Become curious about comfort and care.

What kind of support would make this lighter to carry?

Name the support or boundary you need.

Who could receive one honest sentence from you?

Name the support or boundary you need.

What boundary would protect your next hour?

Name the support or boundary you need.

What question could you ask instead of trying to guess?

Name the support or boundary you need.

What task is not yours to solve alone?

Name the support or boundary you need.

What would a clear “not today” make room for?

Name the support or boundary you need.

Where could you ask for help before you are at capacity?

Name the support or boundary you need.

What conversation needs a softer beginning?

Name the support or boundary you need.

What do you need someone else to understand about today?

Name the support or boundary you need.

What has been helping, even a little?

Recognize what is already working.

What did you do today that you almost failed to count?

Recognize what is already working.

Where did you choose a sustainable pace?

Recognize what is already working.

What is one thing you have already survived or learned?

Recognize what is already working.

What would make progress feel less like a scoreboard?

Recognize what is already working.

What is worth repeating tomorrow?

Recognize what is already working.

What part of your routine is quietly working?

Recognize what is already working.

What did you notice with curiosity instead of judgment?

Recognize what is already working.

What is one reason to trust your ability to continue?

Recognize what is already working.

If today needed to be smaller,
what could become optional?

Find one small next step on a hard day.

What is the next physical action—not the whole project?

Find one small next step on a hard day.

What can wait until you have more information or energy?

Find one small next step on a hard day.

What can you set down for ten minutes?

Find one small next step on a hard day.

What is one kind way to end this loop?

Find one small next step on a hard day.

What needs a list, a timer, a glass of water, or a message?

Find one small next step on a hard day.

What would you like the next hour to feel like?

Find one small next step on a hard day.

What is one decision you do not have to make right now?

Find one small next step on a hard day.

What would “enough for today” look like?

Find one small next step on a hard day.